WEEK 2

First Day I started designing the menu bar of the library website. I focused on arranging the navigation links properly and making sure the layout looked clean and organized. I also added a little bit of functionality to test how the menu would behave when clicked. It was challenging at first, but I was satisfied with the initial outcome.

Second Day I worked on improving the landing page and continued brainstorming the overall design concept. I explored different layout ideas and thought about how to make the homepage more modern and user-friendly while still suitable for a government library website.

Third Day I studied possible design inspirations for the category collection section. I reviewed different layout structures and made several revisions in Figma. I adjusted spacing, typography, and alignment to make the design cleaner and more balanced.

Fourth Day I designed the Browse page of the website. I organized how the books would be displayed and considered how users would filter or navigate through categories. I focused on keeping the layout simple and readable.

Fifth Day I applied finishing touches to the Browse page and refined some parts of the navigation. After that, I started coding the Login and Sign Up pages. I worked on structuring the forms and planning how the authentication flow would work. It was productive, and I felt that the project was slowly coming together.
